

Your age is not an excuse to hold back from ENTREPRENEURIAL AMBITION

*22-year-old Angela Mawman is young, talented, ambitious, has the world at her feet and owns her own business!
So, just your average twenty-something, really...*

Former dance graduate Angela Mawman is no stranger to the world of business. At just 22 she has investing in her own Jabberjacksfranchise and taking the franchise industry by storm.

Often revered to a middle-aged industry, Angela is here to break the stereotype. Without apology and without any doubt, age is but a number for this young entrepreneur.

She is confident in her approach to business and was never in any doubt she could make it work for herself, "And I knew I always wanted to run my own business and there was an opening in my area where I used to live. So, I just took it!"

Angela is under no illusion her age could be a disadvantage within the industry, but takes it all in her stride, "It's probably both a help and a hindrance," she says "helpful in the fact that you're starting out young, so can grow the business. And a hindrance in the fact you are still quite young and so don't have as much experience in the world. This is when I appreciate having the backing of the Jabberjacks franchise. They offer me advice and guidance about all aspects of my business."

Angela's positive attitude and passion for what she does is integral to the growth of her business, however, she realises this can sometimes affect relationships outside of work, from friends to family. "I try to create spare time in the evenings so I can hang out with friends; to try and chill and not look at work for a little bit. It can be difficult because I really love what I do and am always looking for ways to develop my business. But I try not to see it as too much of an issue." Angela says. "My friends and family are really supportive of me which really helps."

Starting a business could be a daunting venture for someone who has recently left her teenage years behind, however, Angela's ambition is at the forefront of her entrepreneurialism and franchising is her gateway, "It's just a way of coming into business, working out how to run the business on your own to start with instead of starting from scratch," she says, "Franchising in general is just having support behind to give you the confidence to just do it!"

Angela realises she couldn't do it alone and accredits her success to the countless support she's received within the industry, "Since I've started franchising, Jabberjacks Head Office has been amazing." Her mature attitude towards business is what is surely driving her success and allowing her to plan for future. "I'm hoping to expand my business. Run more classes and deliver even more parties in my local area."
